Sanders, read by Companion Kniffin at a recent meeting of the Commandery recalled many incidents of the East Tennessee Campaign, and having witnessed the engagement in which General Sanders received his death wound while at the head of his command resisting the advance of the enemy, it has occurred to me that it might prove interesting to dwell for a short time upon what transpired in and around Knoxville during its seige by Longstreet in November, 1863, more particularly the attack upon and defense of the fort in which my regiment, the Seventy-ninth New York, commonly known as the Highlanders, was stationed, and which, after his death, was named Fort Sanders in honor of his memory. It will be remembered that after the battle of Gettysburg the Confederate General Longstreet had been sent with a strong force to reinforce General Bragg, and had arrived in time to participate in the battle of Chickamauga.
