North Africa, the Maghrib, is part of several regional networks at the same time. Close cultural, historical, and often political ties of these Arab States with the Arab States of the Middle East must be juxtaposed with some traditional and some very recent and increasing political and economic ties with black Africa. In a third direction, the states of North Africa have important economic and political relations with Western Europe in general and with France in particular. Although the common planning in the sixties for some sort of economic union did not come to fruition for a variety of reasons, the intra-regional relations of these states with each other are becoming increasingly important and, although each state is pursuing its own economic policy, there is increasing movement towards the eventual development of common economic policies. Moreover, in their association with the Organization of African Unity (OAU), they are pursuing a common policy toward several issues, including policies toward Africa and colonialism....
